ABOUT DELIRIUM TREMENS

Correction of Some Popular Errors in Regard to the Terrible Disease.

The Victims Dangerous Only to Themselves-The Third Attack Not Always Fatal-Personal Experiences of the Writer.

Et. Louis Globe-Democrat.

There are many popular errors concerning the disease called delirium tremens, and comparatively little actual knowledge of its direct cause, what it consists of, the proper method of treatment and its cure. A "crazy drunk," mania-a-potu (commonly called "jim-jams," or the horrors) and delirium tremens, by the public in general, are supposed to be one and the same disease, when, in fact, they bear but slight resemblance. Even the medical fraternity are lamentably ignorant upon the subject, and few, indeed, have a just conception of the disease or the proper method of treatment to be pursued. Mania-a-potu bears about the same rela tion to delirium tremens as does a sever cold to a fever; or, in other words, the dilference between the two is the difference between imagination and reality. In the former the victim has hallucinations, sees strange sights, and hears people talking to and about him, all of which imaginary ideas he can be reasoned out of; but when the latter condition obtains, then everything becomes a reality, and all the powers this side of eternity cannot convince him to the contrary, and it is not good policy to make the attempt, as it only aggravates the

Another very prevalent error lies in considering a person with the tremens a dangerous maniac. It is true that delirium tremens is one of the many forms of insanity for the time it exists; but the victim is in no manner dangerous to others. He is in constant fear; some trouble or danger threatens him at every point, and his chief desire is to escape, not by injuring some one, but to get way from surrounding perils. Sometimes his earthly career is to be cut short by poison, and he will refuse food, drink or medicine. Again, he is to e cut into pieces with knives, and he will beg piteously for some more speedy form of death. In fact, death in some form threatens him on every hand.

Although it is admitted that delirium tremens is a form of insanity produced by excessive alcoholic indulgence, it differs from a pure case in that during the time the former continues the person will remember distinctly everything he heard or saw (in imagination) and recognize those with whom he is acquainted, and also remember actual conversation, while in the latter case the period of insanity is a total blank, whether it be for one week, one year or more. Medical authority and the statistics of various mebriate asylums will bear out this statement.

Another error often emanates from socalled temperance lecturers, who either from ignorance or desire to create profound horror, have depicted a man dying from the tremens continually "screaming for rum." Records cannot be produced to attest such a statement. As a matter of fact. a person will often quit drinking when the delirium commences, without knowing he is in that condition. In an actual case he never realizes that he is delirious. He imagines himself all right and every one else wrong. Another error lies in the supposition by many that a person always dies from the third attack. With proper treatment he may pass through many and finally die from old age. Again, the idea is enter-tained, and even by some physicians, that a complete withdrawal of alcoholic stimulants from an excessive drinker is liable to produce delirium. On the contrary, when the system becomes impregnated to a certain degree with alcoholic poison, delirium will supervene whether the habit is con-tinued or not. To continue drinking, or even to partake of liquor at al ris merely to add fuel to fire, or poison to poison. While there is no danger to be feared from a person in delirium tremens, there is great danger to the sufferer if not under complete restraint, and a person may be thus afflicted for days or even weeks before the disease is recognized as such, and many cases of suicide may be attributed to this cause. A case is remembered by the writer of a physician of good standing in the community, who, while suffering from the disease and an inmate of an institution, called for his surgical case, and when asked for what purposes, answered that his abdomen was full of small snakes, and he explained the manner in which he proposed to perform a surgical op-eration on himself to dislodge them. Had he been at home undoubtedly a snicide would have been recorded in the paperscause unknown. Another person, after being pursued by demons of every description, and threatened with death in many forms, was told by an immense fish that swam into his room that by taking a cer-tain preparation he would be enabled to tive under water and so escape all persecu-tions. If the victim had been at liberty he knows but that many of the cases reported | avenged. as accidental drowning have resulted from

SOME PERSONAL EXPERIENCES. Perhaps no better idea of what the disease consists of can be given than by relating the writer's own unvarnished experience, which was as follows: After a protracted debauch I landed in an institution for the cure of inebriety, and was assigned a room in the hospital department, where in a few hours my trouble commenced. I was continually seeing shadows of pictures on the walls. Faces, some angry and distorted, others very beautiful, would appear. At times I would see some wild animal gazing at me through the ventilator or window. These made no noise, but there were invisible people who persisted in talking to me, sometimes giv-ing me friendly advice, and at others using the vilest epithets, and threatening me with some fearful punishment unless I "went away;" but that I could not do, nor did I then care to, for I realized that all this confusion existed only in imagination, although I would forget myself sometimes and answer back occasionally, and then laugh at myself for it afterward. This state of affairs continued for two days, and then changed from mania-apotu to delirium tremens, or from imagination to reality. That is (and this is where the line of demarkation may be drawn). knew it was imagination before. After the change from the first to the second stage of the disease, I was really sure that everything I saw or heard was real, and no one could make me believe dif-

The change came about almost instantaneously, and in the following manner: For a wonder, I was lying on the bed, and distinctly heard the physician in charge talking with a policeman concerning me, by which I learned that I was there under observation, and in a few days was to be sent to an insane asylum. He told the officer when to come after me, and gave special instruction to take meaway in a herdic instead of the patrol wagon, as a matter of safety. He also told the attendants to keep a sharp watch upon me. I opened my door and looked out into the corridor, but, of course, no one was visible. I called an attendant and asked him about the matter. but he denied it, as did also the physican a few minutes afterward. I insisted that it was a fact just the same; and, could I have done so, I would have made my escape, even though in nearly a nude condition. To guard against any such contingency, I was placed in a room the window and door of which were grated, and here my real torment commenced.

WHAT THE VICTIM SAW. To describe all I passed through would make a large book. The scenes were constantly changing from one extreme to another. Sometimes it would be pictures whose beauty would defy the most noted artists to reproduce; beautiful women in resplendent dress who, like the dissolving views of the stereopticon. And, ah! when your faithful dog brings it whisky, distillers' finish would change to women in a nude state. to you, holding it so gingerly and yet so $1.18; sugars unchanged. that I might protect them, and swore | fellow."

like a pirate when I was refused. I claimed there was nothing the matter with myself, that those who had locked me in were crazy, if any one, and that I was unjustly de-tained; but I could not make them believe it. In the twinkling of an eye the scene was again changed, and I was surrounded by venomous reptiles of all sizes and kinds, and by dangerous animals of every known and many unknown species, and whose number would test the capacity of the proverbial Noah's ark and the descriptive ability of a Dante. Thus it continued, ever changing from one scene of horror to another; and these sights were living, moving objects and beings. At one time, and for to me some unknown reason, former acquaintances were boring holes through the wall through which to shoot me, and to guard against that I crawled under the mattress. They then decided that as they could not shoot through that they would set it on fire and cremate me, and I screamed "Help! Murder! Fire!" as loudly as I could. The next minute I had a new trouble. Small doors in the side of the room would open, through which came troops of small animals of a strange kind. Some seemed to be playful and harmless. Others were not so, and I was obliged to be very active to keep out of their reach. Again, I had exposed the secrets of some order, and a delega-tion visited me and gave me a choice of a manner of death, the pen-alty I must suffer; but I compromised with them by joining the order. Rats and snakes by the million, animals of every known species, and thousands that no one ever saw but myself, besides many people to injure me in some way, were present with me in a room about ten feet square, but which at times seemed as extensive as a large hall; and here I remained in this living hell for two days and nights, until the proper time arrived, and I was given a dose that sent me to sleep most of the time for the next thirty-six hours, after which reason resumed her throne, and I was cured. Imagine yourself in the "nightmare" lasting two days and nights, and you have some idea of delirium tremens.

GENERAL BOULANGER'S FORTUNE. Story of How He Rescued Empress Carlotta from the Mexicans.

3. F. W., in the Rider and Driver. The recent suicide of General Boulanger recalls to my mind the incident that really laid the foundation of his military tortune and fame. When Napoleon III decided to send Maximilian to Mexico, in the vain hope of being able to establish an empire in that part of the American continent, he selected Marshal of troops. Among the officers ordered on this service was Boulanger. He was then | lost. The trading during the entire session a captain of Spatus, having but just returned from Algeria. The Princess Carlotta was an enthusiastic and daring rider. While her husband out the active list, while the was holding his absurd court in the city of the Montezumas, Carlotta used to mount her beautiful horse nearly every day and ride out of the main gate into the open country. On such occasions she was seldom attended by more than one groom. The Princess was a woman of extraordinary beauty and extremely tascinating manners. Like Maximilian, she was intoxicated by the pride and pleasure caused by her imperial, but evanescent rank. Whenever the Empress left the City of Mexico for a ride, it was her habit to go galloping over the arid plains for miles in | tone was strong and the late weakness in a straight direction. Thus engaged, she made a picturesque figure in the semitropical landscape, and many a Mexican was forced to admire the woman, though his native patriotism led him to hate the State bonds have been entirely neglected. imperial couple.

For weeks did Carlotta take these wild rides. She was never interrupted, and none of the court imagined that she was at any time in danger. One blazing hot after-noon Captain Boulanger was the officer commanding the guard at the principal gate of the city. He had just rolled a fresh cigarette, using the tender inner leaf of a corn-ear for the wrapper. While lighting it he happened to look down the road, and saw a small cloud of dust rapidly approach-

Lolling against the small portal Boulanger watched the progress of the rider, supposing it to be a courier. Nearer and nearer came the dust, when to his astonishment the young captain saw that it was raised by a horsewoman. A second glance told him that the galloping rider was his Empress. As Carlotta swept round a slight bend in the road, scarcely half a mile from the gate, Boulanger discovered a small body of horsemen in hot pursuit.

As it was evident that these Mexicans were endeavoring to capture Carlotta as a war prize, Boulanger saw the necessity of speedy action. Throwing away his cigarette the captain summoned his guard and ordered the gate thrown wide open. Then he and his men rushed down the road, forming in line as they advanced. Carlotta galloped on and soon reached the gate and safety. Boulanger and his guard opening a rapid volley on her pursuers. The latter, seeing that their prize had escaped them, reined in and then galloped off in safety.

For this action Boulanger was made a Mexican brigadier by Maximilian. On the return of the French treops to Paris, after Maximilian's execution at Queretaro, Emperor Napoleon gave the principal officers an audience. He noticed Boulanger among them, and greeted him very cordially, alluding to the Carlotta incident. From that day until the Second French Empire expired at Sedan, Bonlanger was one of Louis Napoleon's favorites, and rose rapidly to the rank of general. Maximilian met a shameful death, Carlotta is a lunatic, Napoleon died in exile,

THE SPORTSMAN'S MONTH The Crisp October Days and Frosty Nights

the Huntsman's Ideal Season. The sweltering days are over. Cool nights have come. Now, if you are the true, keen field sportsman, whose slum-bers of late have been broken by grouse's whirring wings or the sound of the shrill whistle of the woodcock, you know your time has come. You take from the closet the breechloader and look it over, throw it to your shoulder and glance along its barrels. The feeling is growing on you. How your heart thrills as you think of the bags last season and anticipate the present season's sport! have been country-born or to have a friend or relative at an old country place where you are welcome in the autumn time. You know where to go for Bob White along the hedges by the old buck wheat field and down toward the hazel thicket, and for woodcock down along the spring-holes in the alders. and the lordly grouse beyond the berry patch and bordering the sugar bush on the hillside facing the warm sun. The same old sugar bush! What a place it used to be in your boyhood for squirrels, gray and black, and the little sancy red chickadee. You step forth into the crisp morning air and feel the pure ozone as it fills your lungs. What a breath you draw in! How your eye glistens as you glance over the landscape! The grasses are dead and dry at the tops, the soft maple leaves are turning to crimson and gold, and perhaps you may perceive a slight tinge of frost on that upper rail as you leap fence. And your dog-ah! how enters into the spirit of the occasion; with what frantic rushes he bounds here and there, away from you and back again, but watching your every motion. Let him go: he will be all right after you have crossed a field or two. Let him run and roll over and give tongue in the mad excitement of the first outing of the season. The thrills at your heart are increasing and will increase and keep on in volume and intensity until-but we will not anticipate. You cross the pasture down to that swale fed by the spring holes. You know the place well; its alders and bogs have heen trampled through by the cattle in the hot days just past. Steady, Dash! He is making game. How carefully he stops, now almost crouching. He pauses. See the swift backward glance of the eye assure him that you are ready. How your heart is beating now. He comes to a point, and soon the bird springs from the bog and skirts toward that opening or essays to climb up through the small treetops. Your heart stops beating, your nerves are on a tension, and, as Frank Forester says, with "eye of faith and finger of instinct," you touch the trigger and see the puff of feathers drift off to leeward and the lordly bird turn over and pitch down by that water birch or that clump of oak turning red and yellow under the magician's touch. The stock market to-day was quiet, and after continuing strong during most of the session yielded to renewed "bear" pressure, and the early gains were wiped out in almost every case among the available shares. The opening was made on a moderate volume of business, but first prices were from 18 to 38 per cent. higher than last night's figures, supported by further purchases for foreign account and considera-ble buying for the "shorts." The market continued to improve on a small volume of business until after the issue of the bank statement, which showed a large in-crease in cash and a gain in the surplus reserve of $2,390,000, but the buying during the early part of the day had been to discount this favorable exhibit, and there was a rush of the trading element in the final dealings to put out another line of "shorts"based on the withdrawal of the support given during the last few days. The result was that prices yielded rapidly in the last few minutes' trading, and almost without exception the previous gains were neutralized, with something in addition failed to exhibit any feature of note. The early advances were contined to fractions and very uniform throughlater declines possessed the same quality. Atchison, Northern Pacific preferred, Missouri Pacific. Louisville & Nashville, Union Pacific, St. Paul, and Lackawanna were the leading active stocks, but in none was there any remarkable trading. The market finally closed quiet and heavy at the decline with most stocks at a shade under first prices. The final changes are all insignificant, but declines abound. TRADING AT CHICAGO.

The Lowest Price Touched by Wheat Was 9714c at the Close.

CHICAGO, Oct. 17 .- Wheat opened dull and easy to-day, influenced chiefly by the heavy receipts, which were 176 cars in excess of the estimates. The market also felt the pressure of the wheat delivered on "puts" yesterday, but there was liberal covering by "shorts." New York sent some buying orders and Hutchinson's brokers were quite active on the bargain side. Then came a report that it was raining again in North Dakota, and that much of the wheat might have tried the experiment and a and now Boulanger is a suicide. Next came a cable stating that it was reported in Germany that Russia was about to prohibit the exportation of potatoes, wheat bread and wheat flour. This was not given much consideration for a time, but when a report was added to it that the exports from both coasts of wheat and flour during the past sixteen weeks amounted to 66,673,000 bushels, against 28,989,000 bushels for the corresponding period last year, there was a rally of by @1c. followed by a light recession, and then a period of dullness and steadiness. INDIANAPOLIS MARKETS.

A Week in Which Trade Has Been Fairly Satisfactory with the Wholesale Men. INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 17 .- Inquiry among the wholesale houses shows a very satisfactory trade in the week closing to-day. On some lines weak prices have prevailed. Under this head would come poultry, which to-day goes off another 1/2 cent. Fruits of home growth, vegetables, the hide market as well, are flat again. The poultry market East is overstocked, and, although somewhat relieved on Thursday and Friday, was to-day reported glutted again by Friday's and Saturday's receipts. Oranges are in better supply, and next week prices will likely break. Dry-goods men speak of their trade as being very satisfactory, with firm prices as a rule prevailing. Grocers report trade good. Prices on several staple articles are easier in tone, although unchanged in quotations. The opinion is expressed that coffees are to go lower and that sugars will rule steady for some time to come, although the consump tion of sugars is much less than at any time in the last four months. Millers are still complaining of being unable to make any money, wheat relatively being so much higher than flour. Especially will this remark apply to export flour. Trade with the boot and shoe houses and the leatherdealers has improved the last few days Prices on all descriptions of leather are

THE DAILY JOURNAL

At 15 Cents a Week.

On Aug. 28 the proprietors of the JOURNAL announced that, beginning Oct. 1, the price of the Daily would be reduced to 15 cents a week, or 20 cents, including the Sunday issue. During September the subscription list increased with astonishing rapidity, and the Journal opened the month of October with a list of subscribers larger by thousands than at any previous time. The Journal, in its various editions-Daily, Sunday and Weekly-treats Home and Foreign Events of all descriptions with a fullness and completeness not attempted by any other newspaper in Indiana. Among the newspapers of the State it is pre-eminently the best, and Indiana readers can nowhere else find what they want in the way of State and local news. It circulates largely in every county in Indiana, and has correspondents in every town and village of importance. This feature of the Journal, during the ensuing year will be kept up to its present high standard of promptness and accuracy, and the service will be improved wherever it may be needed.

The Journal's market reports are prepared with the greatest care possible, and no pains or expense are spared to make them accurate and absolutely reliable.

The Journal is the only newspaper in the State owning and publish. ing all the news furnished by the two great press associations (the Western Associated Press and the United Press), in addition to which it fur. nishes an abundance of special service from all the principal cities of the country. It has been, and will in the future be, the aim of the publishers of the Indianapolis Journal to furnish a perfect and complete newspaper, deficient in no department or particular.

No Indiana reader, certainly no Indiana Republican, should be without the Journal. While it is thoroughly and soundly Republican in politics, devoted to the interests of the Republican party, the Journal will not allow its news to be colored by partisan bias, but will give the news of the day without fear or favor.

Especial attention is invited to the merits of

THE SUNDAY JOURNAL

A large, handsomely printed paper, never less than twelve pages in size, frequently sixteen or twenty, and which will be increased in dimensions as the exigencies of business may require and justice to the reader demand This issue presents a very large amount of the best current literature, including stories, poems and sketches by many of the best known and most popular writers of the time. The publishers ask examination and comparison of this issue with any paper of similar character published or sold in Indiana. The SUNDAY JOURNAL can be subscribed for and received exclusive of the Daily Journal.

THE INDIANA STATE JOURNAL

(THE WEEKLY EDITION),

One Dollar per year, has a circulation extending to every county in Indiana and adjacent territory. It is a complete compendium of the news of the week, accompanied by the latest market reports, and special departments devoted to agricultural, horticultural and household topics. It is complete in every department.
